FIGHTING TERRORIST ARSON

Hebron Hills, a region surrounding the city of Hebron, is known for its particularly violent, extremist Arab population. In recent years, Jewish pioneers have been plagued mercilessly with heinous Arab terrorist attacks, including kidnappings, shootings at passing Israeli cars, infiltrations of Jewish communities, arson, and murder. Arab extremists frequently use arson to wreak havoc in Jewish communities throughout Judea and Samaria. One small match along the perimeter of an isolated community can quickly and effectively ignite a massive fire, endangering lives and destroying homes and crops. For vulnerable pioneers living under the constant threat of arson, quickly controlling these wildfires can be the difference between life or death.

Just last year, Arab arsonists targeted a small community in Hebron Hills. The dry conditions fanned the flames, quickly spreading it across the entire community and ultimately necessitating the complete evacuation of all residents. The community's skeleton fire-fighting crew, aided by crews from more distant localities, heroically subdued the fire, and thankfully, no lives were lost that day. But homes and infrastructures were damaged.

The Hebron Hills Regional Council oversees and supports security activities for the small communities in the region. Since there are only two fire stations in the entire region, spread over 1,000 square km, both volunteer and professional security team members in Hebron Hills must wear many hats: rangers, firefighters, and paramedics, all at once. Whether patrolling the desolate Judean hills or rushing to an emergency, these security teams must be prepared for any situation, fully stocked with a variety of gear and supplies on hand.

Fire-fighters have been using leaf blowers to extinguish and control fires for decades, quickly preventing the spread of flames and dramatically reducing damage. The expansive Hebron Hills region includes all of the small communities and the surrounding plains and valleys. By the time it takes one of the regional firetrucks to reach the site of a remote fire, what started as a small blaze could quickly spread and threaten lives. Hebron Hills desperately needs your help to purchase fifteen backpack leaf blowers to help first responders improve their efficiency and response time and save lives during frequent arson events in the region.

The Hebron Hills Region needs your help to purchase vital fire-fighting equipment to prevent terrorist-ignited fires from spreading to Jewish communities. Your support will fully equip security personnel to contain and put out field fires in the dry Hebron Hills region before they reach the communities and threaten lives, crops, and homes. Your donation can help keep these men, women, and children safe as they fulfill Biblical prophecy in Israel's Heartland.
